

Garlic and Onions

Bioweapons?

Do they eat onions and garlic? Most animals can't stand them because of their smell (for example, onions contain a chemical that's basically tear gas, and the smell of fried onions is a component in skunk spray). Do they hate them? Do they like them? Because they're strong and funky?

Chemical probably, Bio almost certainly not. I know a lot was made of biological weapons immediately after 9/11, but I think the consensus has moved away from them being the most dangerous of the WMDs, or at least that they're too unpredictable to be used in warfare. Once you release something it's out in the wild and can't be controlled, and it's not hard to imagine your own side getting infected along with the enemy.

As for whether yinrih love garlic/onions, I can assure you they do, or rather analogous foods, especially for the smell, but for them it's like cabbage. It's tasty in the moment but you quickly tire of it if it lingers for too long. In fact there's a word for a toothsome aroma that is initially pleasant but gets less so over time.
